Course Dates (Sundays 10 am – 5 pm)

October 31, December 5, January 9, February 13, March 6 + online work (6 hours)

Course Description

Second/foreign language (L2) learners need not only knowledge of grammar and vocabulary but also ability to understand and use culturally appropriate language according to the given social context (pragmatic or sociolinguistic competence). However, pragmatic aspects of the L2 have generally received little attention in the L2 curriculum and teacher development.

This course focuses on the learning and teaching of L2 pragmatics. The aim of the course is for you to develop or enhance your understanding of what pragmatics is, how L2 pragmatics has progressed as a subfield of second language acquisition, and ways that learners can become better versed in how to be pragmatically appropriate in an L2. The course will start by exploring theoretical concepts related to politeness, face, implicature, speech acts, and discourse, and examine samples of past research in cross-cultural, interlanguage, and acquisitional pragmatics. The course will then introduce various research instruments, methods, and theoretical frameworks, which we will critically evaluate in relation to our view of language learning as a cognitive, psychological, social, and emotional activity. Finally, due to the special focus placed on the pedagogical considerations in this course, we will take a close look at effective instructional practices and investigate issues related to classroom assessment of learners' pragmatic competence. You are encouraged to practice reflective teaching while you design (and engage in) pragmatics-focused instruction.

Course Requirements

Your Responsibilities:

- To attend all class meetings and participate in activities and discussions at all levels.
- To complete required readings before class and engage in reflection on your current teaching practice.
- To gather resources and information from existing literature and the CARLA pragmatics database related to your topics. Explore independently for at least three hours.
- To read and learn from your peers' papers and lessons independently for at least three hours.

Assignments:

Pragmatic language analysis journal (2 entries): due 2nd & 4th course meetings

The purpose of this assignment is to provide you with an opportunity to analyze authentic language use from a pragmatics or discourse point of view that goes beyond the lay observation of language. For the first entry, identify a small piece of AUTHENTIC (naturally-occurring or naturalistic) language sample in English (or L2 Japanese) spoken or written by a pragmatically competent user(s) of the language. It may be an email message in your inbox, a Facebook post, or audio- or video-recordings of your dinner-time conversations. In case of oral data, transcribe them for analysis. Language used in the high-PDI context is recommended as you are likely to find more pragmatic strategies in such data. For the second entry, collect a few pieces of contrastive/comparable natural or natural(istic) data on the topic of your mid-term paper (see below). Your data can be elicited through DCTs and/or role-plays or ideally captured in their ecological environment through field observation or audio-/video-recording. These data can be used in your final lesson plan below.

For each entry, use the terms and concepts introduced in this course and analyze them both linguistically and culturally. Indicate which parts of your data represent certain pragmatics/discourse strategies, express face, (in)directness, (in)formality, or (im)politeness, respect, or compassion, index certain relationships or identities, display power and dominance, create potential misunderstanding, and so forth.

In building your analysis, you are strongly encouraged to incorporate the terms and concepts from the course readings and discussions. Each entry should be approximately 300 words excluding your language data. Submit each entry in the “Pragmatic Language Analysis Journals” section of our course Google Classroom (GC) before the second and fourth course meetings respectively.

Pragmatics-focused literature review/lesson plan (mid-term/final papers): due 3rd & 5th course meetings

In a pair or individually, you are asked to choose and research a component of pragmatic competence or discourse feature (mid-term paper) and develop a lesson plan that aims to improve learners’ pragmatic awareness and/or use of that selected feature (final paper).

Think of your mid-term paper as an extension of a language analysis journal entry, except that you will be more proactively researching and reporting empirically-based information about your selected topic. If your topic is a speech act, see if it is included in CARLA’s “Descriptions of Speech Acts” website. If not, or if you select another pragmatic or discourse feature, do your own library research or feel free to speak to me individually to help identify the relevant literature. The mid-term paper can be part of your final paper, serving as a short introduction to your lesson plan. Submit your mid-term paper in the Stream section of the GC to share with your class before the 3rd course meeting and be prepared to informally discuss it in class. Spend at least one hour reading your peers’ mid-term papers to learn about a wider range of topics. You will receive written instructor feedback in the “Mid-term Papers” folder in the GC.

Your mid-term paper and second journal entry should become the basis of your instructional intervention (lesson plan). You are welcome to adapt published lesson plans or create one on your own. You will receive suggestions and feedback from other course participants as you make a presentation in the last course meeting. I will assess and comment on your lesson in response to your written final paper. The deadline for this paper is 10 am of the day of the last course meeting (submit in the “Final Papers” folder in GC). See the guidelines for the details of this assignment.

Assessment

Below is a synopsis of how assignments will be reflected in the final course grade:

Participation (Attendance/participation in class and online)	20%
Assignment A: Language analysis journal entries (15% each)	30%
Assignment B: Mid-term paper	20%
Assignment B: Final paper write-up and presentation	30%

Evaluation: Letter grade
